SPIRITS ARE IN POOR SHAPE

NAVAL STORES REVIEW DISCUSSES CONDITIONS IN MARKET FOR PAST WEEK.

The Savannah Naval Stores Review contains the following for the week ending February 18:

Spirits of Turpentine.

The spirits turpentine is somewhat in the dumps, although the receipts remain miserably small, the total for the week ending last night being but 370 cases. Never during the week was there any real strength to the market, and it was merely a question of time that a drop must come. The domestic demand, so far as the Savannah market is concerned, was almost all, doubtless, being well supplied from other points. A very few orders of any consequence here would have served to maintain the market at or above 52 cents. Without them a continued decline would seem to be in sight. An early movement from Florida of new spirits is soon to be looked for, and it is not improbable that within three weeks fresh virgin spirits will be in the markets, indicating the opening of the new naval stores year. Nothing has been done in May-August futures and the outlook remains as stated last week, that there will be no transactions in advance for those months. What the next crop will be remains an open question, some maintaining that it will show some increase, some that it will show a decrease, and quite a number that it will be just about what it has been this season. The recent inclement weather has no doubt interfered with box-cutting and tended to hold down production, quite fortunately for the producers. Naval stores, like cotton, is one of those crops which bring in more money in a year of small production than in a year of large output. The less that is made, within reason, the greater the financial returns. The stock at Savannah still remains very much larger than in past years at this period of the year, and it looks as though the quantity carried over into April will be very much ahead of that on hand April 1st of last year. What the stocks are at the dimmer port is not revealed, but it is thought that they are being steadily diminished by both domestic demand and foreign export and that they will be down to the average level when the new crop rolls in, if not already there.

The Rosin Market.

Rosins are the encouraging feature of the market, and as they make up the vast bulk of the business now producers can keep up smiling countenances, regardless of what spirits may be doing. Advances for the week of ten cents on H. G. 12 1/2 on F. 10 on E and D, and 7 1/2 on C-A, more than make up for any dullness in turpentine. Nearly all of the rosins coming to market now, and for the next few weeks, is made up of F and below, and so long as they rule as high as they have been doing the producers can continue to enjoy dreams of automobiles, city mansions, and large stock holdings in factorage concerns. I and all grades above remain unchanged in prices, as they have done for some time past. There is not enough of the top grades coming in for sale to secure advances even if two or three days receipts of them were held up at a time. A glance at the week's sales on page 17 will show just about what proportion of the receipts they make just now. The advances on commons during the week were somewhat, it is stated, due to a little squeeze of parties who needed them to meet contracts, but the undercurrent of the market on all grades was undoubtedly strong and even though they may return to former prices with the pressure of demand relieved, they are apt to take a turn upward again any day. It looks as though all that is ever needed this season to put rosins up is just a trifling pressure of demand at any time.
